

I wish to voice my opposition to the Consumer Bankers Associations (CBA) challenge of Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law. This law has been a godsend to the citizens of Indiana. It is a voluntary service. Prior to Indiana's law I was constantly getting calls that interrupted my evenings. At times in order to have peace in the evenings I had to turn on my internet so I did not have to listen to the phone ring. I should not have to do that in my own home. Quite frankly I don't want my bank, credit card company or phone company to call me at night trying to sell me something. They can't seem to provide me with customer service in the evenings, so why should I have to put up with them trying to sell me something. Thanks for the opportunity to comment.
